Dear Mr. Proctor,

I thought you might like to read the latest from the government in which Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Saunders accuses your friend, Cecilia Glorius, of being a liar.

According to Mr. Saunders, the government did nothing wrong during your arrest or the search of your home. Mr. Saunders contends that FBI Special Agent Stanley Ornellas did not coerce Ms. Glorius to give authorities consent to search your property without a warrant.

In fact, Mr. Saunders suggests that the feds did nothing improper during the the investigations of Anita Busch and Ned Zeman, nor during the raids on Anthony Pellicano's office. Do you believe that?

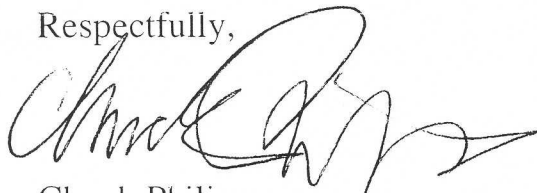

I am curious to hear your version of what happened during your arrest. Is Mr. Saunders's description accurate? How did Agent Ornellas treat you that night and afterwards? What questions did he ask you about Mr. Pellicano and Steven Seagal?

Did Agent Ornellas use Dan Patterson to feed specific names to you during the two weeks before the FBI began taping your conversations?

Please write and help me to figure out the truth. Please at least give me a clue or two as to what direction I should go.

Thanks for your time.

Respectfully,

Chuck Philips
